II. Read the following passage and answer the questions each, in a sentence or two :-

An American writer called Thoreau said, "It takes two to speak the truth one to speak and another to hear. It is a very important saying and it would save a great deal of argument and annoyance in life if people paid attention to it. "It takes two to speak the truth." You cannot speak the truth by saying what you think is the truth. You have to express it differently for different people. To some Socialism means taking money from those who have money and giving it to those who have none. To other people socialism means state control of industry and commerce. To others we cannot tell a man the truth about socialism until you know what he understands by the term. If you say "I believe in socialism," and he understands that you believe in robbery, you must not be surprised if he takes a dislike to you, and if that is not what you mean, you did not speak the truth. If a man says to a friend, "Good Morning Mr. A," and the friend replies, "It's not a good morning at all", is that the truth even if the morning is bad?

Turn over

It is only stupid people who take remarks too literally as we say, that is who do not look for the real meaning in the statements people make. Thus when friend says: "You will not be going past the post office, will you?" he may mean "I should be grateful if you post a letter for me if it is not too much trouble." If you say 'no' to the question because you are not going past the post office, it means to your friend that you are not willing to go out of your way even a little to oblige him.

1. What is the fact the writer wants people to pay attention to ?
2. What do you think is the most prejudiced understanding of the term socialism ?
3. How does the writer show that something can be literally true and untrue ?
4. What does the author call those people who cannot get beyond the literal meaning of a statement ?
5. What does the question "Are you going past the office" really mean ?
